Dot Foods announces new distribution center site

Burley, ID distribution center to open in July 2008

Mt. Sterling, Ill., July 11, 2007 – Dot Foods, Inc. announced it would begin construction of a new distribution center in Burley, ID later this fall.

Burley is in eastern Idaho and has a population of about 10,000 people. Burley is located 200 miles northwest of Salt Lake City, UT, along Interstate 84.

“We do extensive cost analysis when selecting a new distribution center site,” said Jim Tracy, Dot Foods senior vice president/general counsel. “When we compared our logistical studies, the cost of doing business and the incentive packages put together by Burley and the State of Idaho, we were excited to have the opportunity to establish a new distribution center at this location.

“Beyond that, we felt like there was a great family atmosphere in the Burley community. We were very impressed with everyone that we have worked with in Idaho on selection of the site. The community has a quality workforce that will provide great service to our customers in the Northwest,” said Tracy.

The new facility will service Dot Foods customers in Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Utah and parts of Nevada and Wyoming. The 140,000 sq. ft. multi-temp distribution center will be located on 40 acres. The company plans to open the facility in July 2008.

This will be the ninth distribution center for Dot Foods, the leading food redistributor in the United States. The company also has distribution centers in Modesto, CA; Vidalia, GA; Lemont, IL; Williamsport, MD; Liverpool, NY; Ardmore, OK; and its main distribution center in Mt. Sterling. Dot Foods plans to open a Cambridge City, IN distribution center this fall.
